reformed the duty allotted to them.

A committee from the House informed the Senate that the House was about to adjourn, sine die, and would receive any communication the Senate might desire to make.

Mr. Guinn moved that the Senate now adjourn sine die.

The President said—

Gentlemen of the Senate:

I find before me a resolution adopted by your honorable body, for which I thank you. It will be ever remembered by me with feelings of gratitude; it also admonishes me that our labors are about closing. We are on the eve of separation, and I cannot permit this opportunity to pass, without returning to each and every one of you my cordial thanks for the kindness and courtesy uniformly extended to me.

When entering upon the discharge of my duties as presiding officer of the Senate, I flattered myself that with your aid I would be punctual and impartial. If I have succeeded in convincing you of an earnest desire to act faithfully and impartially, then will my most sanguine hopes have been realized.

I will ever recur with pride to the pleasant associations and friendships formed during the present session, and fondly hope that time will only tend to cement them the closer. That our labors may redound to your praise, and the good of our common country, and each and every one of you return to your homes blessed with health and prosperity is my earnest prayer. I now pronounce the Senate adjourned, sine die.
